The Nation's Christmas Tree—A Living Tribute

In 1924, Charles E. Lee and his daughter visited what was then General Grant National Park (now a part of Sequoia-Kings Canyon National Parks) in the Sierra Nevada of California. As they gazed upon the magnificent giant sequoia known as the General Grant, Lee's daughter exclaimed, "what a wonderful Christmas tree it would be!"

On noon, Christmas Day 1925, Lee organized the first Christmas program held at the General Grant tree. Lee and his fellow members of the Sanger Chamber of Commerce hoped to make the holiday trek to the park an annual ceremony. They proposed their idea to President Calvin Coolidge, who designated the General Grant as the Nation's Christmas Tree on April 28, 1926.

Giant sequoias (Sequoiadendron giganteum) are the largest living individual things on earth. The General Grant, one of the largest of the species, is over 267 feet tall, 40 inches across its base and over 107 feet around. Estimates of the tree's age range from 1500 to 2000 years old.

At one of the early ceremonies, Col. John White, longtime Park Superintendent, expressed the feelings shared by the annual attendees ...

"We are gathered here around a tree that is worthy of representing the spirit of America on Christmas Day. That spirit is best expressed in the plain things of life, the love of the family circle, the simple life of the out of doors. The tree is a pillar that is a testimony that things of the spirit transcend those of the flesh."

During World War II, the Christmas celebration was not held due to gas rationing. Over the next few years, growing local support for the ceremony persuaded the National Park Service to reinstate the annual event.

On March 29, 1956, President Dwight D. Eisenhower proclaimed the General Grant tree a National Shrine as a living memorial to the men and women of the United States who have given their lives in service to their country. The second Sunday of every December marks the National Park Service's Christmas celebration in the Grant Grove area of Sequoia & Kings Canyon National Park. Each December park rangers place a wreath at the base of the General Grant tree to remember those who gave their lives defending our nation.
